Tongue-based processes occur without cortical involvement and are thus "subcortical" processes. Subcortical speech processes are generally not well understood. However, one cortical speech process involves the left and right hemispheres. This process may be referred to as a "Cunningham process." The Cunningham process is sometimes referred to as a "dual bilateral process." In accordance with the Cunningham process, speech information is transmitted from the left hemisphere to the right hemisphere. The speech information is then transmitted from the right hemisphere to the left hemisphere. Generally, the transmission from the right hemisphere to the left hemisphere is referred to as a "right-to-left activation" or "R-to-L activation." Conversely, the transmission from the left hemisphere to the right hemisphere is referred to as an "L-to-R activation." During R-to-L activations, a speech information sent from the right hemisphere to the left hemisphere may interfere with the R-to-L activation. Thus, the L-to-R activation is in jeopardy. Therefore, the right hemisphere may ensure that the R-to-L activation does not interfere with the L-to-R activation. Generally, the R-to-L activation is delayed with respect to the L-to-R activation. Accordingly, the L-to-R activation may be completed prior to the R-to-L activation. 18-year-old driving unlicensed becomes first to get 3 year sentence LAHORE: On Tuesday (today), an unlicensed driver involved in a car accident that killed a three-year-old boy, was sentenced to three years in prison for causing the accident, which left the child dead on the spot.
